Sampling

Sampling Procedure

The Global Findex indicators are drawn from survey data collected by Gallup, Inc. over the 2011 calendar year, covering more than 150,000 adults in 148 economies and representing about 97 percent of the world's population. Since 2005, Gallup has surveyed adults annually around the world, using a uniform methodology and randomly selected, nationally representative samples. The second round of Global Findex indicators was collected in 2014 and is forthcoming in 2015. The set of indicators will be collected again in 2017.

Surveys were conducted face-to-face in economies where landline telephone penetration is less than 80 percent, or where face-to-face interviewing is customary. The first stage of sampling is the identification of primary sampling units, consisting of clusters of households. The primary sampling units are stratified by population size, geography, or both, and clustering is achieved through one or more stages of sampling. Where population information is available, sample selection is based on probabilities proportional to population size; otherwise, simple random sampling is used. Random route procedures are used to select sampled households. Unless an outright refusal occurs, interviewers make up to three attempts to survey the sampled household. If an interview cannot be obtained at the initial sampled household, a simple substitution method is used. Respondents are randomly selected within the selected households by means of the Kish grid.

Surveys were conducted by telephone in economies where landline telephone penetration is over 80 percent. The telephone surveys were conducted using random digit dialing or a nationally representative list of phone numbers. In selected countries where cell phone penetration is high, a dual sampling frame is used. Random respondent selection is achieved by using either the latest birthday or Kish grid method. At least three attempts are made to teach a person in each household, spread over different days and times of year.

The sample size in the majority of economies was 1,000 individuals.

Weighting

Data weighting is used to ensure a nationally representative sample for each economy. First, base sampling weights are constructed to account for oversamples and household size. If an oversample has been conducted, the data are weighted to correct the disproportionate sample. Weighting by household size (number of residents age 15 and above) is used to adjust for the probability of selection, as residents in large households will have a disproportionately lower probability of being selected for the sample. Second, poststratification weights are constructed. Population statistics are used to weight the data by gender, age, and, where reliable data are available, education or socioeconomic status.

Questionnaires

Overview

The questionnaire was designed by the World Bank, in conjunction with a Technical Advisory Board composed of leading academics, practitioners, and policy makers in the field of financial inclusion. The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and Gallup, Inc. also provided valuable input. The questionnaire was piloted in over 20 countries using focus groups, cognitive interviews, and field testing. The questionnaire is available in 142 languages upon request.

Questions on insurance, mobile payments, and loan purposes were asked only in developing economies. The indicators on awareness and use of microfinance institutions (MFIs) are not included in the public dataset. However, adults who report saving at an MFI are considered to have an account; this is reflected in the composite account indicator.

Estimates of Sampling Error

Estimates of standard errors (which account for sampling error) vary by country and indicator. For country- and indicator-specific standard errors, refer to the Annex and Country Table in Demirguc-Kunt, Asli and L. Klapper. 2012. "Measuring Financial Inclusion: The Global Findex." Version	Version 2 of the data includes the following changes: 1. Modifications to all countries - Modification of the “inc_q” data : The methodology to calculate within-country income quintiles changed since 2011. Instead of basing the within-country income quintiles on household income data alone, additional data on household headcount are used. The finer granularity allows a more precise mapping of the income data into the within-country income quintiles. Weights are used to make the mapping nationally representative to the income structure of the country. The new method was retroactively applied to the 2011 data. All observations in “inc_q” are affected. 2. Modifications to specific countries - Removal of Mozambique, 2011 data : Errors in the data collection make the data unusable. - Removal of Somalia, 2011 data : The regional distribution of observations in 2011 makes the data unusable when making comparisons over time; Changes in terminology of account ownership make the data unusable when making comparisons over time. - Removal of Tunisia, 2011 data : The regional distribution of observations in 2011 makes the data unusable when making comparisons over time. - Modification of Bangladesh, 2011 data: Due to the nature of saving at a microfinance institution in Bangladesh, those respondents that did so should not have been counted as owning an account. The number of observations in “account” that is affected is 83. - Modification of Congo, Rep., 2011 data: Weights are changed to adjust the regional distribution of observations in 2011 which was incorrect. All observations in “wgt” are affected. - Modification of Czech Republic, 2011 data: Local education categories were erroneously coded. The number of observations in “educ” that is affected is 108. - Modification of Jordan, 2011 data: Local education categories were erroneously coded. The number of observations in “educ” that is affected is 2. - Modification of Saudi Arabia, 2011 data: Local education categories were erroneously coded. The number of observations in “educ” that is affected is 5. 3. Modifications to World, 2011 data - All modifications as discussed under 1. - All modifications as discussed under 2. - Modification of the “pop_adult” data The adult population data is updated to reflect the revised population data published in the World Development Indicators as of July 2014.
