Sampling

Sampling Procedure

The evaluation sample consists of 2,980 individuals, with equal numbers assigned to treatment and control. The initial sample was selected from a list of 3,807 clients in 14 of Alexandria Businessmen Association (ABA)'s branches in Alexandria who were scheduled to repay their loans between 4/15/2012 and 7/31/2012 and whose loans are between 1,500 LE and 10,000 LE ($250 and $1,667). In the field, the study excluded 927 clients from the initial sample who either didn't own a business themselves or ABA's loan officers indicated are not eligible for future loans due to likelihood of future repayment delinquency.

The 2,980 ABA clients in the sample were randomly assigned by a computer program to two groups: treatment and control. The only difference between the two groups is the treatment group was eligible to purchase the EPP and the control was not. In order to achieve balance between the two groups, the study used a combination of stratification and pair--wise matching.

The researchers first stratified on gender and microfinance office branch to create 32 strata. There were 16 office branch codes; 14 of which are branches that make up ABA's operations in Alexandria, 1 was the code for clients who've transferred between branches, and 1 was the code for clients who've graduated from a sub--microlending program within ABA to microlending.

Within these 32 strata, the study created pair--wise matches using an "optimal greedy algorithm" to minimize the Mahalanobis distance between the values of 13 variables likely to drive loan take up and investment decisions.

There were no deviations from the sample design.

Response Rate

The attrition rate was low. In the baseline survey, the enterprises response rate was 2961/2980 (99.4%) compared to the sample. In the endline survey, the enterprises response rate was 2927/2961 (98.9%) compared to the baseline.

DATA COLLECTION NOTES

In December 2011, the researchers conducted a pre-intervention research survey on 320 microentrepreneurs in urban areas in Cairo, Giza, and Alexandria to determine the feasibility and demand for a macroeconomic shock microinsurance product. The responses to this pre-intervention research survey indicated a strong demand for macroeconomic shock insurance and a high likelihood of development impact.

The primary sources of data are a baseline survey conducted in March 2012 immediately before the EPP was offered to ABA clients, a follow-up survey in September or October, another follow-up survey immediately after any economic shock, and an endline survey one month after the last ABA client's EPP expires or one year after the economic shock. In addition, ABA will provide us with administrative loan tracking data.

Pre question

I will ask you several questions about the chance or likelihood that certain events are going to happen. In order to visualize the likelihood, I'd like to use a meter stick for you to point to the likelihood. Zero on the meter stick means you are absolutely sure that the event will happen. As the numbers on the meter go up, it means that you think the likelihood that the event happens increases. For example, if you point to ten or twenty, it means you think the event is not likely to happen but it is still possible. If you point to 50, it means that it is just as likely it happen as it is dose not happen (fifty-fifty). If you point to 60 it means the event is slightly more likely to happen than to not happen. There is no right or wrong answer, I just want to know what you think. Let me give you an example. Imagine that we toss a coin. Say, when we asked about the chance that it will come up to heads, you point to 50 on the meter stick. This means that you believe that coin would come up to heads in 50 out of 100 games on average if we play for a long time.

Literal question

Now, I want you to tell me the likelihood for each event happening:

1) That you'll go to the market within the next two days ?

In order to visualize the likelihood, I'd like to use a meter stick for you to point to the likelihood. Zero on the meter stick means you are absolutely sure that the event will happen. As the numbers on the meter go up, it means that you think the likelihood that the event happens increases. For example, if you point to ten or twenty, it means you think the event is not likely to happen but it is still possible. If you point to 50, it means that it is just as likely it happen as it is dose not happen (fifty-fifty). If you point to 60 it means the event is slightly more likely to happen than to not happen. There is no right or wrong answer, I just want to know what you think. Let me give you an example. Imagine that we toss a coin. Say, when we asked about the chance that it will come up to heads, you point to 50 on the meter stick. This means that you believe that coin would come up to heads in 50 out of 100 games on average if we play for a long time.

Literal question

If a local, well trusted NGO offered you insurance on macroeconomic shocks, would that decrease risk enough for you to invest in new capital?

Interviewer instructions

Macroeconomics shocks are defined as any month in which the Case 30 is suspended or anytime the food inflation is above 75% or subsidized item inflation is above 20%. In the last year, there would have been a payout in February, March, and November since the stock market was suspended at that time. There would have been payouts from October 2009 to January 2010 due to food inflation, and there would have been payouts July through September of 2008 due to subsidized goods payouts. The insurance product would last for 1 year and it would be paid out the first month in which there was a shock. The insurance product would cover either a new micro loan or a new authorized asset purchase (up to 5000 LE) and the insurance would pay out the full value of either the loan or the authorized asset. The cost of the insurance would be 5% of the value of the loan or authorized asset purchase.
