Scope

NOTES

This research adapted the Survey on Income and Living Conditions (SILC) instrument of the European Union (EU), a standardized household survey used regularly to collect data from the general Serbian population on income, poverty, social exclusion, and living conditions ("general SILC"). The survey instrument was adapted to include questions on discrimination in the workplace, trust, and overall life satisfaction of LGBTI people in Serbia. Between February and April 2017, 998 self-identified LGBTI people answered the adapted "LGBTI SILC" online. Online engagement was chosen to encourage a large number of people to participate privately and confidentially, which is a recognized strategy for reaching LGBTI people who otherwise may not be willing or feel safe to reveal their identity in face-to-face interviews. The survey was disseminated using a network of local nongovernmental organizations in Serbia, and respondents were made aware of the survey through social networks, advertisements, and dating apps. The responses were weighted, and a sample matching procedure was conducted using a covariate balancing propensity score to allow a comparison between the two samples: the "LGBTI SILC", and responses from the Serbian population to the "general SILC". The samples were matched on the basis of: age, sex assigned at birth, educational attainment, marital status, region, and area of residence (urban or rural). This generated, for the first time, a data set on the socioeconomic status of LGBTI persons that allows a comparison to Serbia's general population.

Sampling

Sampling Procedure

The survey was conducted with a self-selected, nonprobability sample. LGBTI people are a hard-to-reach population with at least two characteristics that make standard random sampling procedures inappropriate: the absence of a sampling frame (i.e., the characteristics of the total population are unknown) and the strong need for privacy protection. As a result, it cannot be said that respondents to the survey represent the LGBTI population as a whole. To address this concern, at least in part, the sample was weighted based on a study of the literature.

Weighting

Representative surveys of LGBTI populations are difficult to conduct and online surveys are considered an appropriate method. LGBTI people are a hard-to-reach population due to at least two characteristics that make standard random sampling procedures inappropriate: the absence of a sampling frame (i.e., the characteristics of the total population are unknown) and the strong requirement for privacy protection given the stigma and risk of violence LGBTI people often face. This survey was conducted with a self-selected, nonprobability sample. As a result, it cannot be said that respondents represent the whole LGBTI population in Serbia. To address this concern, at least in part, the sample was weighted based on a study of the literature. Weighting sample characteristics to population targets to correct for over- and/or under-sampled groups can be effective in providing generalizable results, though the process is sensitive to the weighting strategy. Due to the lack of administrative data on LGBTI populations, the weighting strategy took into account only sex assigned at birth and sexual orientation.

Now we would like to ask you a few questions about other household members. By household we consider a family or any other community of persons who dwell under the same roof and spend their income together on settling the basic needs (housing, food etc.). Household members can live in their place of residence all the time or in some other settlement, or country, occasionally. A person living alone, who is not a member of another household, forms their own household.

Pre questionHOUSEHOLD INCOME

We were asking you about your personal income, and now would like to ask you about the income of other household members in your household. Please remember that by household we consider a family or other community of persons who dwell under the same roof and spend their income together on settling the basic needs (housing, food etc.). Household members can live in their place of residence all the time or in some other settlement, or country, occasionally. A person living alone, who is not a member of another household, forms their own household.

Literal question

What is the average monthly amount of your total household income excluding your personal income in the previous 12 months, and the number of months during which the household had this income?

Besides the salary income includes other earnings (from travel, bonuses, earnings generated on the basis of copyright or similar contracts, income from self-employment including activities such as giving private lessons, income from renting of apartment/house, profits that have accrued on any grounds or income from pension).

If you do not have a precise information at the moment, please give us your closest approximation.
