ABSTRACT

This survey aims to study the movement and return intentions of families in Erbil camps for internally displaced people (IDPs).

The survey took place in three IDPs camps located in Erbil for around 3,000 families in the period between January-March 2021. It focuses on the years and times of displacement and the possible family movement in case of camp closure in addition to the situation in the families' place of origin and the returning to place of origin intention and its obstacles.
